Lecture Series 2010-2011 'Global Values in a Changing World'

Lecture and Discussion:

Social responsibility in a context of change: from corporate and organizational to networks, markets and territories

Patricia Almeida Ashley (Prince Claus Chair, ISS)

Monday 17 January 2011

Fourth lecture in the series 'Global Values in a Changing World- Synergy of State and Society in a Globalized World'

---

Abstract: In the state of the art concept and models of corporate social responsibility (CSR) in Brazil and abroad, Ashley (2010) suggests that the concept lacks viability for its wide dissemination, while the conditions of the institutional field are not yet developed and coherent with the development of what she calls 'socially and environmentally responsible markets and territories'. Most research on CSR lies in the knowledge and research areas of Business Administration or Production Engineering, and focuses on the analysis at the enterprise level – the firm level as the center of the issue of CSR to be based on voluntarism initiatives and business practices, seeking for innovations in models and management tools, apart from training on social responsibility leadership. Ashley proposes to reframe the research and policy perspective on CSR from corporate and organizational levels to a broader one of multi-actor and multilevel social responsibility in a territorial level of analysis – the MASTER model. The model presents three levels of ethical challenges, core-issues of social responsibility, and degrees of political commitment applicable to the governance and multi-actor social responsibility of networks of stakeholders in specific territories politically oriented to sustainable development.
